

Hang Pham

In a world where business strategy and technology are increasingly intertwined, Hang brings a rare skill: the ability to speak both languages, fluently — and she builds bridges between business leaders and technologists for the benefit of the entire enterprise.

Whether it's bringing a new consumer product to life using advanced analytics, deploying an application to 45,000+ users, transforming a company's global business with technology, or simply right setting large scale technology initiatives that are going sideways, Hang has advised business executives and helped Boards navigate large, high profile and complex technology investments.

As a Woodrow Wilson Fellow with a Master's Degree in International Development and a MBA in Management of Global Information Technology from American University, Hang has focused the last 20 years of her technology consulting career working with Fortune 500 and multinational clients taking on transformational initiatives. Recently, she left the Big 4 consulting world to take on the Chief Operations Officer role at an Arlington, VA based tech company.